Color, Texture and Light

By Patrick Rhames

This image captures the interior of the Kilmalkadar (Cill Maolcheadair) Church ruin, a small, Early (600 AD) Christian site in County Kerry, Ireland. The building was constructed with multi-colored stone, predominately reds, yellows and greenish/tans. The image displays the colors and the elaborate detail of the Romanesque arch in the wall separating the Nave from the Chancel.

I was (am) absolutely intrigued with the variegated colors, the light and the intricate detail of this building and wanted to capture it as it had struck me, visually. Thus, the title “Color, Texture & Light”.

The image is the final product of a bracketed sequence of nine different exposures, one stop apart. The images were composited as an HDR rendering. All frames were shot on a tripod placing the arch and window dead center in the final product.

Equipment used was a Nikon D800E mounted with a Nikkor 24mm perspective control lens. Matrix metering, manual exposure with aperture set at f/22 and focal distance at 3ft. to achieve Hyper-focal focusing. ISO was the camera’s native setting of 100.

Post consisted of RAW tuning in Lightroom with the major processing done in Photoshop using NIK plugin programming. I increased the vibrance and contrast to emphasize the colors and textures. Most importantly (for me) was darkening the wall with the arch in comparison to the chancel behind it to produce depth in the image.

Mount Evans Goat and Kid

By Jonathan Rollins

This image was taken on Mount Evans, Colorado. Lots of animals to photograph. Pika, Bighorn sheep, goats, and a yellow-bellied marmot were some of the animals photographed. I was using a Nikon D850 camera and a 2.8, 300mm lens at F11, ISO 400. Post processing was done using Photoshop and NIK software.

Mobius Arch

By Diane Weigandt

I've only been into photography for a few months and this photo was taken on a weekend trip with Dee, Shelley & Loye to the Eastern Sierras. First time to Alabama Hills & Mobius Arch. Taken with a Panasonic Lumix G9, 12-60 lens.

Baboon

By Loye Stone

This image was taken in Tanzania in the Ngorongora Crater. There were about a zillion Baboons and other primates there; in trees, on the ground, on street signs everywhere! Frankly, they scared me more than the Lions.

I took this shot from about 30 feet away with a Canon 5d Mark III., f 5.6, 1/1000 shutter speed, 2000 ISO with a Canon 100 to 400 mm zoom lens at 400 mm.
